Apple's better than expected gains in Q3 2024, despite iPhone sales decline and continued loss of its main Chinese market

Apple recorded better gains than expected in the third quarter of 2024, despite a decline in iPhone sales and a continued loss of its main Chinese market.

Profits exceeded analyst forecasts, with revenue up 4.9% after the quarter for US$ 85.78 billion in the three months ended June 29, surpassing the average estimate by analysts at a total of 84 million, according to LSEG data that kept its dividend at 25 cents per share.

Investors in Apple were interested to get updates on sales of products for the company in China, the third largest market in the country where Apple's participation in growth is falling. The company fell out of the top five providers of this year for the first time in this month and was overtaken by local brands like Vivo, OPPO or Huawei; the results showed that its revenues fell 6.9% – more dramatically compared to the decline forecast by analysts (24%).

Although sales in China still face challenges, the total of iPhones was better than expected – falling 0.9% to US$ 39.30 billion (R$ 39.7 billion), a smaller decline than analysts expected 2.2% – this improvement is due partly to the increase in demand as Apple launched its AI features with intelligence at its annual WWDC developers conference last month.

The company's AI features include a range of generative AI tools integrated into its operational systems on its devices, including a partnership with OpenAI that integrates its AI assistant Siri.

Even so, these AI features will only be available on the iPhone 15 Pro and later. Apple normally announces new devices in September; therefore, analysts will look to determine how AI features will affect future sales.
