The Tremembé Penitentiary, located in the interior of São Paulo, has started to allow Robinho, a former soccer player, to leave his cell and participate in group activities. He had been in isolation since his arrival at the prison, following his conviction for sexual assault in Italy.

The Secretariat of Penitentiary Administration in São Paulo reported that Robinho has left the adaptation period and has started sharing a cell with other inmates. He can now participate in activities like sunbathing, reintegration activities, and even soccer games. Visits from family members are also allowed.

The Tremembé Penitentiary has a unique infrastructure, including soccer fields, a library, a game room, a chapel, and a horta. The prison is known for hosting famous inmates, including Alexander Nardoni, the Cravinhos brothers, Roger Abdelmassih, Mizael Bispo, Marcos Valério, and others. It is located 130 kilometers from the capital city of São Paulo and has been in operation since 1955. Robinho is serving a nine-year sentence for sexual assault, which he commuted to Brazil after being convicted in Italy. He was transferred to the Tremembé Penitentiary on March 20, and his defense team has filed an appeal with the Supreme Federal Court.

The former soccer player's transition to the new environment is seen as a positive step towards his rehabilitation. The prison's administration has been working to provide inmates with opportunities for social reintegration, aiming to reduce recidivism rates.
