A police in southern Spain frustrated the theft of nearly half a ton of olives at a time when the agricultural season begins and the fruits become a tempting target for opportunists, like professional gangs.

verdeo

– or harvest of green olives - takes place at the beginning of autumn and marks the start of the harvest. As the harvest began in the province of Seville this week, Spanish Guardia Civil officers prevented 465 kg (732 lbs) of olives from being stolen near the town of Albaladejo.

The officers found seven people "collecting olives flagrantly", according to a statement from the force, and arrested a woman who claimed to have paid to hire or supervise six collectors. The police also found fake documents about the cargo (in English) which would have allowed the sale of the stolen olives under false claims about their origin/traceability.

"Thanks to the quick intervention, the theft of 465 kg of olives that had already been collected and loaded on vehicles was avoided", said the statement.

According to the Guardia Civil, 48 people were arrested for stealing olives during the 2023-24 harvest and 371 along the season. The officers also recovered 213,489 kg of olives over the course of the year.

"Only in the province of Seville, 129 people were investigated or arrested for crimes such as the theft of olives, which includes fake documents and frauds", said the statement.

In the same province, the Guardia Civil confiscated 150,000 kg of olives and nearly 100 bottles of five liters each with fake labels claiming their contents were much more expensive than they really were.

The fruits and their "liquid gold" oil have long attracted the attention of criminal gangs. In December of last year, police in Spain and Italy arrested 11 people in 12 countries who had stolen more than 5,000 liters (nearly) of adulterated oil from attacks against an international gang supposedly looking to profit from cheap oils and their equivalents.

Oil prices have risen across Europe, with drought and other adverse climatic conditions affecting harvests in recent years. In Spain, prices have almost tripled. In the last four years, buyers who paid less than 5€ for a liter of high-quality extra virgin oil have seen the price rise as high as 14€. The Spanish production was hit by drought and waves of heat above 40°C (104°F), while in other countries, producers like Greece.

Spain, which produces half of the world's olive oil between October 2023 and May 2024 – much more than the 664,000 tons harvested last year – but well below the 1.3 million or more tons in recent years.
