A decision to refuse refunds to prisoners who were unjustly convicted and sentenced to prison was made to close sportingbet part to save money, the Guardian learned.

The measure, which provoked consternation among ex-prisoners of war and tens of millions of dollars of compensation to cover "living expenses" while they were in prison was justified on the basis of closing sportingbet ministers could not change retrospectively the political decisions.

Nevertheless, a letter from the Ministry of Justice (MoJ) to some ex-prisoners seen by the Guardian said that another consideration is to avoid the "significant administrative costs and other financial costs" of other victims of spontaneous abortions.

It is understood that when the first minister looked at it, it could be possible to refund prisoners, but they were accused of expenses with life and concerns raised about this could turn into a "trem potencial" advocates.

The Liberal Democrats asked the Ministry of Justice to look again at the decision to close sportingbet cases like Paul Blackburn, who spent 25 years in prison after being charged with murder.

Blackburn, who had received more than 100,000 pounds of compensation to cover the cost of work outside prison and said to Reuters to close sportingbet a communication. The practice of anchoring compensation payments in this way did not happen for a decade, and was formally ended last year. The ex-secretary of Justice Alex Chalk said that he would examine what could be done for Blackburn and others?

Blackburn and two other prisoners who were unjustly convicted initially approached the Ministry of Justice through their lawyers under the Conservative government to request that their money be refunded. But after the election, the new Labour government said they would not refund them.

In a letter at the start of this month, the department said that ministers had decided "not to depart from the established principles of public policy", under which changes are not applied retrospectively.

Part of the consideration, he said: "the importance of certainty and ensuring the finality of settlements as well as the significant administrative costs of the refund of living expenses of historical victims".

Blackburn said to the Guardian that the process had had a significant impact on him. As part of this, for the first time he read the official documentation from 2011 and established how much compensation he should receive – and how much should be removed for the cost of living.

"I never had the paperwork before. I didn't use it - I could have had those things on my head", he said,

"This is tearing you out from scratch. I haven't been well in the last two months because of this, it's a resurgence of depression and insomnia; the fact that I can't eat or behave irregularly."

Alistair Carmichael, porta-voz dos assuntos internos do Lib Dems disse que a história de Blackburn foi "totalmente devastadora".

Ele disse: "Tendo sido injustamente preso por 25 anos, ele merece a compensação total que tem direito de não sofrer mais injustiças ao ter dezenas e milhares."

Um porta-voz do MoJ disse: "Os prêmios financeiros feitos após 6 de agosto 2024 como parte da falha no esquema judicial não terão economizado despesas com a vida. No entanto, encerrar aposta sportingbet linha à abordagem padrão para mudanças na política governamental a mudança anunciada ano passado -não se aplica retrospectivamente."
