Explosión de municiones en una base del suroeste de Camboya deja 20 soldados muertos y varios heridos

Una explosión de municiones en una base en la provincia de Kampong Speu, en el suroeste de Camboya, ha causado la muerte de 20 soldados y ha dejado varios heridos, según ha dicho el primer ministro, Hun Manet, en un mensaje de Facebook.

Hun Manet dijo que estaba "profundamente conmovido" cuando se enteró de la explosión del sábado por la tarde en la base. No estuvo clara la causa del incidente.

Las imágenes del lugar muestran varios edificios dañados y humeantes, al menos uno sin techo, y soldados recibiendo atención médica en un hospital. Otras {img}grafías muestran casas con agujeros en los techos.

Cuatro edificios -tres para almacenamiento y uno para uso como instalación- fueron destruidos y varios vehículos militares resultaron dañados, según un oficial del ejército en el lugar, Youeng Sokhon. Agregó que 25 hogares de civiles también resultaron dañados.

La provincia donde ocurrió la explosión ha registrado temperaturas altas y alcanzó los 39 grados Celsius (102 Fahrenheit) el sábado. Aunque las altas temperaturas normalmente no pueden detonar la munición, pueden degradar la estabilidad de los explosivos con el tiempo, lo que hace que una sola pequeña explosión pueda encender un incendio y una reacción en cadena.

Condolencias y promesas de compensación

Hun Manet ofreció condolencias a las familias de los soldados fallecidos y prometió que el gobierno pagaría los funerales y proporcionaría compensación tanto a los fallecidos como a los heridos.

Hun Manet se graduó en la Academia Militar de los Estados Unidos en West Point, Nueva York, y fue comandante del ejército antes de ser elegido el año pasado para servir como primer ministro, sucedendo a su padre, Hun Sen, quien dirigió Camboya durante 38 años antes de renunciar.
