Poker as a Metaphor for Life and Decision Making

A review of The Biggest Bluff by Maria

Konnikova Tom Farr · Follow 5 min read · Aug 9, 2024 -- Share

As both a writer and a teacher, I'm always trying to find connections between ideas that aren't obvious if you're not looking for them. In my mind, that's the key to creativity and generating new ideas or finding new solutions to old problems. Because of this, I'm always searching for new things to read that will challenge and hopefully expand my current thinking.

Which is why when I kept seeing variations of the headline

"Successful Writer Becomes Successful Poker Player" repeatedly as I scrolled through my Twitter feed for a period of several weeks, I became intrigued. The headlines were referring to science writer for the New Yorker, Maria Konnikova, who chronicled her unlikely journey of learning how to play Texas Hold 'Em poker without any previous knowledge of the game and becoming a pro in a just a year in her new book The Biggest Bluff: How I Learned to Pay Attention, Master Myself, and Win.

I have to confess that I knew nothing about poker and didn't really have any interest in it either before I read this book. But when I read the synopsis of the book, which is all about poker as a metaphor for life and the kinds of thinking that should go into the decision-making process, I was convinced I had to read it. Reading as a present-tense chronological narrative of Konnikova's journey to learn how to play poker and make better decisions in her own life, The Biggest Bluff is not only a compelling Hero's Journey story; it's an extended treatise on the biggest areas of growth people struggle with in making wise decisions for their lives.

As a father of a son (9 years old) with diagnosed anxiety disorder, I found so much in this book that will help me to help my son better cope with the worries that often leave him paralyzed and unable to make good decisions.

Toward the end of the book, Konnikova talks about a poker concept called "tilt," which is basically when you play poorly because you're allowing yourself and your decision-making to be driven by emotions that cloud your judgment rather than by calm rational thought. She talks about tracking emotional triggers and learning how to control the automatic reactions she has to those triggers to think through how to properly respond...
